

MYSTERY IN GIRL'S BREACH OF PROMISE SUIT

Mystery surrounds the breach of promise suit brought by a State street manicure girl against a man some twenty years her senior. The woman in the case is Miss Viola Mundy, 30 years old, and the man is Edward L. Kingsland, said to be an ex-state senator of Michigan, residing at Holland.

Just what basis Miss Mundy has for a suit is not known and neither she nor her attorney, Joel Baker, will talk. It is known, however, that Baker walked over to the City Hall Square Hotel and scanned the register until he hit the name of "E. L. Hancock and wife." At about this time "Mr. Hancock" walked in and was served with a subpoena bearing the name of Edward L. Kingsland. Baker said he had the right man.

WHATCHAMEAN BY POSTER?

The gay colored poster that hangs in the college girl's den or in her brother's bedroom wasn't always the gaudy thing it is today.

The poster is something of an upstart. Originally it was very plain, but very useful, and when tacked to posts in the streets of London many years ago it was not considered ornamental.

The public notice was called a poster, simply because it was tacked to posts, and posts were rather common in London in the early days before pavements were invented, the row of posts marking the place where pedestrians walked in the streets and where vehicles were not allowed to go.
